ABSTRACT

This guide was compiled in response to the need for a centralized system to catalogue resources designed to promote greater fairness in public school education. Part I, Materials Resources, includes sections on research, special issues, textbook evaluation instruments, nonprint materials, resource lists, and bibliographies. Part II, Procedural Resources, consists of sections on textbook guidelines; curriculum guidelines; administrative guidelines and recommendations; and State statutes, procedures, and guidelines. Part III, Directories, lists publishers of books and educational materials that, in the estimation of the publishers, contribute favorably to or are sensitive to the treatment of minorities and/or females. Included are titles of resources publishers have provided. Part IV, Organizational Resources, lists organizations that can be contacted for additional or specialized information and resources and conferences that have been concerned with biases in educational materials and with the development of multi-ethnic/pluralistic education. When appropriate, resources are organized by grade level and subject matter. A guide to indexing and format is included. (Author/MK)

This guide was developed by Rose Ann Alspektor and Jeana Wirtenberg under the general supervision of Sandra Tangri, Director of the Office of Research.

Items were put into format and coded by Rose Ann Alspektor, Esther Chow, David Harris, Barbara Karpf, Pamela Proctor, Linda Quinn, Georgia Strasburg, and Jeana Wirtenberg. Diane Hiligh and Cathy Somers handled correspondence with textbook publishers and State departments of education and also provided secretarial and administrative support for the project.

The staff of the Publications Support Center was responsible for computer entry, manipulation, and organization of final data for publication.

INTRODUCTION

In the present decade there has been a vast increase in the number and variety of resources[1] designed to promote greater fairness in public school education. This abundance of resources creates the need for a centralized system to catalog the resources and provide information about where and how they may be obtained.

Fair Textbooks: A Resource Guide has been compiled in response to this ongoing need. It reflects the current efforts of parents, educators, publishers, State education departments, and other groups and individuals who are interested in the development and use of bias-free educational materials.[2] The purpose of the guide is to bring together the resources they have developed in a manner that would facilitate the most immediate and widest possible dissemination of this information. Lack of access to information about these available resources creates a barrier to their full utilization, which this lists attempts to overcome.

States and local communities are in the best position to assess and respond to the educational needs of their students. By providing parents, librarians, educators, administrators, and publishers with access to the rich variety of available resources, the guide can help make it possible for curriculum and textbook decisions to reflect optimally the unique character of our multi-ethnic, pluralistic communities.

To compile the most comprehensive list possible, letters were sent to textbook publishers and to every State department of education, as well as to other publishers and to a variety of organizations and individuals involved in civil rights issues, asking if they had any resources that they wished included in the list.

It is important to note that the inclusion of any particular item should not be interpreted as an endorsement by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. No attempt was made to evaluate individual items. There may well be some items included that, by some standards, would not be considered totally free of biases against all groups (including the aged, handicapped, etc.). In some well-meaning attempts to eradicate one form of bias, other forms of bias often still prevail.

Since it is difficult to be aware of every potential resource that is currently available, this list should not be considered all-inclusive. However, resources have been included that can be applied to most groups in our society (e.g., minority females, religious minorities), at every level of public education (elementary through secondary), and in most subject areas (e.g., reading, social studies). Moreover, an attempt was made to maximize accessibility to these particular aspects of the resources by coding the items by the group, grade level, and subject area to which they apply.

When used critically and creatively, this collection of resources can contribute to the continuing process of creating educational curricula[3] that fairly and accurately represent the wide diversity of groups in our culture.

Organization and Contents

The resources fall into four major categories: Material Resources, Procedural Resources, Directories, and Organizational Resources. These categories form the major divisions of the guide. Within each of these larger categories, the resources have been organized into smaller sections by type of material, subject area applicability, and grade/age level.

Part I — Material Resources includes six sections: Research, Special Issues, Textbook Evaluation Instruments, Nonprint Materials, Resource Lists, and Bibliographies. Each section is introduced by a brief description of the types of items included, how they were selected, and to whom they may be useful, and, often, a few suggestions are provided for how they may be used. Following the introduction, each section is organized by grade level and subject matter.

Part II — Procedural Resources consists of four sections: Textbook Guidelines; Curriculum Guidelines; Administrative Guidelines and Recommendations; and State Statutes, Procedures, and Guidelines. While Section 7, Textbook Guidelines, and Section 8, Curriculum Guidelines, are organized by grade level and subject matter to be consistent with Part I, the following are not consistent with this organization: Section 9, Administrative Guidelines, and Section 10, State Statutes, Procedures, and Guidelines. (See the introductions to these two sections for a description and rationale of their respective organization.)

[1] For this book, the term "resource" refers to any item that can be applied to the task of promoting equality based on sex, race, ethnicity, and, in general, greater social fairness in education. Resources thus defined exist in myriad forms.

[2] For an extensive discussion of what is meant by bias-free materials, refer to the "Statement on Bias-Free Materials" of the Association of American Publishers, which is included in its entirety at the beginning of Section 11.

[3] For a discussion of factors to be considered with regard to the selection, utilization, and appropriateness of educational resources, reference may be made to: Francis P. Hunkins, "The Resources, The Decisions," Educational Leadership, November 1972, pp. 104—06.

Part III — Directories. The Publisher Directory (Section 11) begins with the "Statement on Bias-free Materials" of the Association of American Publishers. The section itself contains an alphabetical listing of publishers of books and other educational materials that, in the estimation of the publishers, contribute favorably to or are particularly sensitive to the treatment of minorities and/or females. Also included are those publishers who have developed guidelines, are developing guidelines, or are using another publisher's guidelines in an attempt to encourage authors and illustrators to avoid textbook biases.

Listed with each publisher are the titles of any catalogs, guidelines, and other resources that they have provided. Each resource is coded for the group(s), grade level(s), and subject area(s) for which it applies on the line underneath the title.

The State Education Department Directory (Section 12) is organized alphabetically by State. Included are the statutes, procedures, guidelines, and other resources that each State provided. Under the resource title are the group, grade, and subject area codes. More information about the State Education Department Directory can be found in the introduction to Section 12.

Part IV — Organizational Resources includes two sections, one lists organizations and the other, conferences. Both sections are organized alphabetically.

Item Numbers

Resource items are consecutively numbered throughout the guide. These item numbers are used as entries in the Group Indexes, which can be found at the end of each section and also in the Title Index at the end of the book.

You may quickly locate an item by looking for its corresponding number in the upper left or upper right hand corner of each page. Simply find the page with the appropriate range of numbers and the item will be listed there.

Group Index

At the end of each section (except Section 13) a "Group Index" is provided. These indexes will be particularly useful to those individuals or groups who have a primary interest in a particular sex or minority group, such as Asian Americans, black Americans, Hispanic Americans, and so forth. Within each group index, items are organized by grade level and subject area.

When materials for a specific group are desired, refer to the group index at the back of each section. Remember that the type of material (i.e., textbook guidelines, bibliographies, etc.) is indicated by the section title, which is at the bottom of each page. First locate the group headings, then the grade level, and subject area headings. Make note of the numbers listed under the appropriate headings. These item numbers indicate where in the section the items themselves are listed. They are not page numbers.

For example, if you wish to locate textbook guidelines that are sensitive to a particular group (e.g., Asian American), for all grade levels and all subject areas, look in the group index at the end of Section 7. Find the items listed under the group heading Asian American, then the subheading Multi-Grade/Age Levels, and the subheading Multi-Subject Areas and/or Related Issues. Any items listed there should be appropriate.

Title Index

At the end of the guide is an alphabetical listing of the title of each resource. No other information is provided except the numbers used for locating these items in the guide itself. Following every title is at least one such number. Each number represents a place in the guide where that resource is listed and is called its "item number."

If the user has only the title of a particular item and wishes to obtain its mailing address, group focus, price, and so forth, this may be done by:

2) noting the item number listed for it; and,

3) looking up the number(s) by referring to the numerical range at the top, outer corner of each page (as in a dictionary).

Even if the user has complete information about a resource, it may also be of value to check for a multiple listing. By noting the inclusion of a resource in several different sections of the guide, the user is provided with several potential applications of the item.

An additional bonus of the title index is that upon locating a specific resource, the user simultaneously locates those section(s) that contain similar types of materials (with respect to their target groups, grade/age level, etc).

Cross-Referencing of Items

Occasionally, items may be duplicated in more than one section and therefore have more than one item number. In those cases, more than one item number may appear in the index for the same item. This is particularly true of items sent by publishers and State departments of education. In many cases, these items are listed in the directories and then also listed in the section that seemed most appropriate.

When an item from a State education department is listed in a section other than the State Directory

(Section 12), an asterisk (*) is used at the end of the item label. Then, instead of having an address, only the State is provided as the item location. Individuals interested in obtaining these items should refer to the State listing in Section 12 for mailing and phone information. A footnote to this effect is also included on every page where such an item appears.

Example:

Item #205 Chapter 622 1976. 16 pp.*
MASSACHUSETTS
HA E,J,H R,SS,O

* See this State's listing in Section 12.

Resource Format and Coding

Format. Each reference to a resource includes all of the information that is necessary to obtain it or to request more information. For every item, information is provided as to its title, source, date, and, whenever possible, address and price. The only exception is in Section 2, Special Issues, which includes journal articles, which can generally be found in college and university libraries, or can be ordered (for a fee) through the publisher. In many cases, the publisher's name and address is also provided.

Coding. For each item, three sets of codes are provided on a last line of the entry. The first set of codes lists, in a consecutive string of abbreviations, any and all groups to which the resource may be applicable. These codes and their corresponding groups are as follows:

Group Codes

AA — Asian American
AI — American Indian
BA — Black American
HA — Hispanic American
WE — White Ethnic (e.g., Poles, Italians, Germans)
RM — Religious minority (Jewish, etc.)
MF — Minority Female
MM — Minority Male
H — Handicapped
F — Females
M — Males
B — Both Females and Males
( ) — Blank Space Indicates Not Applicable

The second set of codes lists any and all grade levels to which the item may be applied. These codes and their corresponding grade levels are as follows.

Grade Level Codes

E — Elementary K—6
J — Junior High 7—9
H — Senior High 10—12 (In some sections these materials may also be useful to parents, educators, administrators, etc.)

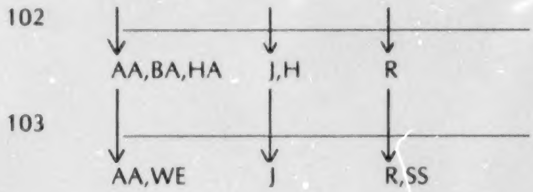
The third set of codes lists any and all subject areas to which the item may be applied. The codes are as follows.

Subject Area Codes

R Reading (includes reading, English, literature, language arts, etc.)
SS Social Studies (includes all areas of social sciences, such as world and U.S. history, government, civics, sociology, anthropology, political science, psychology, sex/race/ethnic/religious studies, etc.)
O Other (includes all areas of mathematics, all areas of science, all areas of vocational education, industrial arts, home economics, art, music, and all other subjects).

It should be noted that each code always appears in the same column as you go down the page. Thus, persons who are especially interested in materials pertaining to a particular group, grade level, or subject area can simply go down the column corresponding to that group's code to find any relevant materials.

Example: To find items for Asian Americans (AA), junior high level (J), in reading (R):



It should be noted that, in general, items are coded according to their greatest potential application rather than in a strict or literal sense. Thus, if an item discusses race/ethnicity in general, it is coded for every racial and ethnic group for which it might be applicable. Similarly, items that discuss "sexism" or issues of "sex fairness" are coded for both males and females, even if there is relatively little material pertinent to males.

The same standards were applied when determining grade level and subject area codes. For example, an article about sexism in education in general is coded with a group code of B (both males and females); grade level codes E, J, and H (all three levels); and subject area codes R, SS, and O (every subject area); since it concerns sexism in all areas of education.

Some confusion may arise, however, if the user wishes to choose resources with a focus on a specific minority group, since the more general materials are coded for all possible groups. A fairly reliable solution is to consider any item listed with the full range of codes, especially the group codes, as having a general application.

When an item is group specific it will usually be obvious, even if it pertains to several groups, because the codes will almost always be a subset of the entire string of codes. This principle applies equally well to grade levels and subject areas.

Note that these codes are used in several different ways, depending on the section (i.e., the type of resource). Usually they are used to describe the groups covered by the resource, the grade levels that may use it, and the course or subject area to which it may be applied. For example, a resource appearing in Section 8, Curriculum Guidelines, with a grade level code of E and a subject area code of SS can be assumed to be a resource that could be used by teachers of elementary school students when teaching social studies.

In some cases, however, the codes are also used to describe the item's topic or area of concern. For example, in Section 1, Research, the codes refer to the grade level and subject area of the textbooks examined in the studies, as well as to whatever resources may be included in the studies' appendices. Thus, if a study examines all grade levels, it will be coded E,J,H. This does not necessarily mean that the item can be used by the children in those grades. Such variations in the application and meaning of codes should become obvious when the section and type of resource is kept in mind.

Users of the guide will note that Section 13, Organizations, is the only section that does not include group, grade level, and subject area codes. Consequently, there is also no corresponding group index for this section.

Legend

1 These numbers represent the range of item numbers listed on that same page (e.g., 432, 433, 434, etc.). Each number corresponds to a specific resource. You may quickly obtain more information about an item by getting its corresponding item number(s) from the title index or group indexes. Then, simply find the page with the appropriate range of numbers located in the upper outside corner and you will have located the relevant resource information.

2 Titles for separating the resources by grade levels are: Multi-Age/Grade Levels, Elementary Level, Junior High Level, High School Level.

3 Subtitles within the grade-level groupings for separating the resources by subject areas are: Multi-Subject Areas and/or Related Issues, Reading, Social Studies, Other.

(2,3) When using the guide you may notice that headings for some categories (e.g., levels, subject areas) are not listed. These headings were eliminated when there were no resources to put under them.

4 The resource items are consecutively numbered throughout the guide. These numbers are used as entries in the group indexes at the end of each section and in the title index at the end of the document. The number always appears in the left margin next to the resource title.

5 Resource title, name, or label (also listed in the title index).

6 The name and location of the resource, developer, distributor, publisher, etc.

7 Date of publication.

8 Group codes are the first set of codes (e.g., AA, BA, HA) on the last line of an item entry. They represent the groups on which the material focuses. The codes are:

AA — Asian American
BA — Black American
HA — Hispanic American
AI — American Indian
WE — White Ethnic (e.g., Poles, Italians, Germans)
RM — Religious Minority (Jewish, etc.)
MF — Minority Female
MM — Minority Male
H — Handicapped
F — Females
M — Males
B — Both Females and Males
( ) — Blank space indicates not applicable

For further discussion and explanation of the codes, please refer to the Introduction section "Resource Format and Coding."

9 Age/Grade Level Codes are the second set of codes (E,J,H) that appear to the right of the group codes on the same line. They represent three age/grade levels: elementary (E), junior high (J), and high school (H) (subsumes adult level). This code indicates the grade focus and age appropriateness of the item.

10 Subject Codes are the third set of codes (R,SS,O) that appear to the right of the age/grade-level codes on the same line. They represent three broad and overlapping subject areas: reading (R), social studies (SS), and other (O) (e.g., math, science, economics).

11 Price information if available.

12,13 Within each of these larger categories the resources have been organized into smaller sections by type of material. The section number and section title will be located on the bottom lines of the outside corner of each page.

14,15 The resources fall into the following major categories: Part I: Material Resources; Part II: Procedural Resources; Part III: Directories; Part IV: Organizational Resources. The location of this information will be on the bottom lines of the inside corner on each page.

Concluding Comments and Suggestions

As indicated earlier, users of the guide are urged to employ both a critical and a creative approach to the resources. Moreover, resources from one section may be used in conjunction with resources from another section to achieve the most fruitful results. Some suggestions for such usages follow:

1. The textbook guidelines (from Section 7) can be applied to the resources (from Sections 5 and 6) by all persons who wish to determine the extent of sex, race/ethnic, and social fairness in their childrens' books.
2. The State statutes, procedures, and guidelines from Section 10 can be compared amongst themselves to determine the range and level of States' involvement across all of the 50 States, thereby providing a national perspective.
3. A State's procedures and guidelines (from Section 10) can be compared with the procedures and guidelines for administrators (from Section 9). A State can then be contacted for further information or suggestions.
4. The content analyses of textbooks described in Research (Section 1) can be applied to the items listed in many other sections, including Curriculum Guidelines (Section 8), and the materials provided by publishers in their catalogs (Sections 5, 6, and 11).
5. Publishers and State education departments can be readily contacted for further information by mail or telephone by using the directories.

In collecting and compiling these materials, the aim has been to provide the user with the most comprehensive list of available sources. The resources have been systematically organized, coded, and indexed to enable users to discover the materials that are the most relevant to their particular interests.

SECTION 1. RESEARCH

Section 1 lists references to empirical research on the topic of textbook bias. While it is not an exhaustive list, it does represent a cross section of most of the major studies that have been conducted in this decade. Studies were selected for inclusion because of: (1) the diversity of their coverage with regard to groups focused upon, grade level of textbooks examined, and subject area of textbooks examined; and (2) their inclusion of resources such as textbook evaluation instruments, resource lists, statutes, organizations, and the like. These studies can provide a broad overview of the issues surrounding minority and female representation in textbooks at different levels and in different subject areas. They are useful for individuals and groups working to ameliorate the problem of textbook bias in specific ways as well. For example, the studies can provide researchers with the methods and tools for conducting content analyses of textbooks currently in use. They can provide parents, educators, and students with an indepth understanding of the nature of textbook bias and its many subtle manifestations and so increase their awareness and sensitivity to the problem. Equipped with a better understanding of the issues, parents, teachers, and students may be in a better position to bring about the kinds of textbook changes they desire. Finally, the studies provide information about specific textbook editions. Local and State textbook selection committees may also find this information useful.

SECTION 2. SPECIAL ISSUES

Section 2 lists references to special issues of all types of publications addressing the problem of textbook bias or suggesting solutions to this problem. Thus, special issues of journals, newsletters, bulletins, and the like are included, as well as some review articles and other general discussions of the topic. An attempt was made to provide literature on the full range of issues, groups, grade levels, and subject areas.

SECTION 3. TEXTBOOK EVAULATION

Section 3 lists instruments that can be used for evaluating textbooks and instructional materials for bias. These instruments vary considerably in their focus (i.e., group/grade level/subject area), as indicated by the codes. Some variability was also observed in terms of the assumptions that underlie the instruments' formulations and conceptualizations. Moreover, extensive variation was noted with regard to the instruments' comprehensiveness and level of specificity or generality. Finally, only a few of the instruments provided any methodological or statistical bases for establishing their validity and/or reliability. As indicated in the introduction, the inclusion of these instruments should not be interpreted as an endorsement. With these caveats in mind, the textbook evaluation instruments can be used by parents, students, educators, librarians, textbook selection committees, researchers, State and local administrators, and others who are concerned with textbook biases. Familiarity and practice with these tools can result in a greater understanding of the issues and a more informed basis for decisions regarding textbook selection and adoption.

SECTION 4. NONPRINT MATERIALS

Section 4 includes references to lists and individual items of nonprint materials, such as toys, games, films, slideshows, movies, that have been developed to counteract existing biases and to promote sex, race, and ethnic fairness in education. As indicated in the introduction, all items are coded for their broadest potential range of application. Many of the smaller items, such as toys and games, may be purchased through the mail or at the address provided. The larger items, such as films, slideshows, and movies, may either be rented for a fee or, in some cases, they may be borrowed on loan. In all cases, inquiries can be made to the individuals and the addresses provided. Please note that individual items have not been evaluated, and their inclusion should not be interpreted as an endorsement.

SECTION 6. BIBLIOGRAPHIES

Section 6 contains references to lists of books (or bibliographies) that at least partially concern race, ethnicity, religion, handicaps, and sex roles and that are appropriate to various grade levels and subject areas. Some of these book lists are annotated; many just cite references. The bibliographies were obtained from a wide range of sources. Some were excerpted from larger publications (in which case the entire document may have to be ordered to obtain the booklist). Others are autonomous booklists that can be ordered as such. Note that throughout this section, the codes represent the entire range of books contained within each list and not each book as a separate item.

SECTION 7. TEXTBOOK GUIDELINES

Section 7 is a nonexhaustive collection of textbook quidelines and recommendations from publishers, State education departments, individuals, and organizations concerned with textbook bias. The guidelines can be used in conjunction with the textbook evaluation instruments listed in Section 3 to determine the degree of race, ethnic, religious, sex, and social fairness (including fairness to the aged and the handicapped) in textbooks currently in use. Note that the guidelines reflect the "ideal" standards and aspirations of the developer. They should not be interpreted as having already been implemented. In many cases the "ideal" textbook standards have not been actualized in the textbooks and other instructional materials themselves. Moreover, we have observed considerable variation among publishers regarding the existence, level of sophistication, and extent of implementation of "formal" (i.e., written) textbook guidelines. Similarly, there is wide variation in the level of State involvement in the textbook selection process and the development of supplemental programs and materials (e.g., an ethnic heritage curriculum). One reason for the considerable variation among textbook publishers has to do with differences in perceptions about the effects that such textbook guidelines might have on authors and illustrators. While some publishers view guidelines as a form of censorship that will inhibit or restrict their authors' creative imaginations, others view them as actually facilitating greater creativity. According to the latter view, guidelines open up whole new areas for exploration by expanding the range of possibilities for human portrayals. An analogy can be made between publishers' views and the wide variation in States' responses to the problem. In many cases, States have statutes that forbid them to dictate textbook contents or to promulgate lists of State approved textbooks. Some such States nevertheless feel that it is acceptable for them to develop materials and programs to assist local communities. These materials may be provided as a service to the community and usually at the request of the local school district. Other States have a stricter interpretation of the statutes. They see the (almost identical) statute as proscribing any involvement at all, and therefore they invest little or no resources in matters relating to textbook selection or to the development of supplemental materials.

SECTION 9. ADMINISTRATIVE GUIDELINES

Section 9 is an accumulation of a wide range of resources for administrators and educators, but also of interest to anyone concerned with the problems of discrimination and bias in education. The guidelines address textbooks, curriculum, employment, hiring practices, textbook selection procedures, staff training opportunities and requirements, and more.

The items listed come from many sources, including publishers, State education departments, community organizations, Federal Government agencies, colleges and universities, groups, and individuals.

The organization of this section is unique. Items are divided into seven broad categories depending on the type of material: multifaceted material; statutes; textbook selection procedures; textbook selection guidelines; recommendations and suggestions; resources; and other. Within each of these categories, resources are presented for: multitarget groups; administrators; educators (teachers, counselors); parents; librarians; textbook selection committees; publishers; authors; and illustrators. Additional information for items with an asterisk (*) can be found by referring to their corresponding listing in the State directory (Section 12).

SECTION 10. STATE STATUTES, PROCEDURES

Section 10 contains existing State textbook adoption statutes, procedures, and guidelines. If a State is not listed in this section, assume that it does not have any statutes regarding textbook content, textbook selection procedures, or textbook selection guidelines. (Refer to the State's listing in Section 12 for further information.)

The States are listed in alphabetical order. Following each State's name, the statutes, procedures, and guidelines are listed, in that order. If one of these does not appear, assume that there is none for that State. Items are introduced by a descriptive word(s) to denote what type of resource it is; i.e., statute, procedures, guidelines, or a combination of these. Whenever possible, information is provided as to the title, date, and number of pages of the item. Item codes are provided on the line under the title.

You will note that an asterisk (*) appears at the end of the title of each item in this section. The prime indicates that the address and phone number for the State education department can be found in the State directory (Section 12). In all cases, the information provided under the corresponding State's name in the State directory can be used to obtain copies of the item listed.

SECTION 11. PUBLISHERS

This section begins with the "Statement on Bias-Free Materials" of the Association of American Publishers,[1] which is included to demonstrate the strength of publishers' stated commitment to removing biases from textbooks. It also serves to illustrate the way that publishers are attempting to go about this process.

The directory itself contains an alphabetical listing of publishers of books and other educational materials that, in the publisher's estimation, contribute favorably to or are particularly sensitive to the treatment of minorities and females. Also included are those publishers who have developed guidelines, are in the process of developing guidelines, or are using another publisher's guidelines in an attempt to encourage authors and illustrators to avoid textbook biases.

The publishers listed in this directory are those who responded affirmatively to a written request for materials or references to materials that they would like to have included in this resource guide. Letters describing the nature of this project were sent to all publishers of elementary and secondary level textbooks (or whose textbook level was unknown) listed in the textbook section of the Directory of American Publishers, Literary Marketplace 1977—1978 (New York: Bowker).

Publishers are not included in this list if: (1) they were not listed in Literary Marketplace 1977—1978; (2) we received no response to our letter; or (3) they responded that, in their assessment, they did not have any relevant publications or materials to be included in the resource guide.[2]

Just as with the rest of this guide, it should be noted that this section is a nonevaluative compilation of existing resources which contains no recommendations or endorsements.

Whenever possible the title, name, and phone number of the appropriate representative is provided on the line under the publisher's name. In general, it is recommended that correspondence be addressed to the title of the representative, rather than to the particular individual, to ensure that it gets a response.

Following this information, a list is provided of the titles of any guidelines, catalogs, or resources that were sent to us in response to our inquiry. Each title is preceded by a one-word description, for example, guidelines, catalog, or other type of resource, presented in that order. Thus, if there is no title preceded by the word guidelines, it can be assumed that there are none for that particular publisher. Whenever more than one item appears in a given category, they are listed in alphabetical order by title.

Each resource is also coded for the group, grade level, and subject area for which it applies. These codes are provided on the line immediately following the title of an item. (For more information about these codes, see the coding section of the general introduction.)

For the convenience of the user, an additional set of codes is provided to the immediate right of the publisher's name. These codes indicate whether a publisher has guidelines (indicated by *), whether the publisher has materials that are sensitive to issues concerning females (indicated by F), and whether the publisher has materials that are sensitive to particular race/ethnic minority groups (indicated by EG). For example, if a publisher has guidelines, materials for females, and materials for race/ethnic groups, it would have *F+EG next to its name.

[1] Written permission to include "Statement on Bias-Free Materials" was granted by Mary McNulty, staff director, School Division of the Association of American Publishers.

[2] Subsequent to our mailings, an additional listing came to our attention that contained some textbook publishers not listed in Literary Marketplace (and therefore who were not contacted). This listing contained an extensive directory of textbook publishers, representatives, and the titles of their publications, including grade level information. For further information about this directory, refer to:
Textbook Adoptions for Idaho Public Schools, 1977 listed as an item under Idaho in the State directory (Section 12).

Statement on Bias-free Materials

Throughout the last decade there has been an increased sensitivity to the role textbooks and other materials play in education. Groups of concerned parents, teachers, and community leaders have called upon publishers to provide materials that meet criteria of fair and equal representation for women and minorities. Many individual publishers have responded by issuing guidelines pertaining to the treatment of people in educational materials.

The Association of American Publishers is committed to the development of instructional programs that reflect our diversified society, portraying individuals of all backgrounds with dignity and worth. The statement that follows is an attempt to present some of the general principles formulated by individual publishers as representative of the effort that the educational publishing industry as a whole is putting forth to eliminate bias and to further the cause of fair and equitable treatment for all people.

America has been from its beginning a nation of tremendous diversity. It has found in that diversity a positive good, a vigorous rejection of complacency, a continuing source of fresh and often opposing viewpoints from which to examine its direction and goals. Freedom to publish without governmental control has long been established as a basic American freedom, and from this freedom has come the diversity of published instructional materials from which local communities may choose.

As a people, we are a conglomeration of customs, beliefs, and lifestyles, united more than anything else by our belief in the ideals on which the country was founded: Freedom, justice, dignity of the individual, equal opportunity for all. If reality has not always kept up with the ideal, as indeed it has not, the ideals have remained.

Much of the social upheaval we have seen in past years has been from people seeking not to overthrow the ideals, but to be embraced more fully by them. We are being told in no uncertain terms that equal opportunity for all must mean just that, and no less.

Education traditionally has been a major path to opportunity in America. It is not surprising, then, that many of the struggles for equal opportunity have centered on educational matters: Who shall sit in what classroom? Who shall be taught by what teacher? What materials shall be taught? Which shall be available for individual use? All are vital concerns for parents and educators seeking equal opportunities for America's children.

Textbooks play an important part in education, transmitting not only facts and figures, but ideas and cultural values. The words and pictures children see in school influence the development of the attitude they carry into adult life: these words and pictures not only express ideas, but are part of the educational experience which shapes ideas.

Publishers of educational materials have a long history of being responsive to the needs of the broad base of American culture. From the beginning of the American educational system educational materials have shown high sensitivity to the predominant social values. Harris' New England Primer published in 1690 started with "in Adam's fall, we sinned all." They were a product of a time when educators wanted materials that combined religious and moral values with reading instruction.

In recent years, educators have emphasized the fact that all children learn at different levels and rates. Publishers met the call for individualized materials—their catalogues are now full of quality programs that offer self-directing and self-correcting instruction.

In a similar way, the publishing industry is responding today to the challenge of bias-free learning materials that reflect the contribution of all cultures and both sexes. Requests for materials that portray all our citizens in a variety of life roles are being answered—each publisher responding in its own way.

In meeting this challenge, the industry is aware that the primary function of textbooks is to deliver information to a wide audience comprising every social, economic, and political background. Because of the diversity of the audience, educational publishers recognize that there may never be a clear consensus regarding social values. They therefore try to follow a pluralistic approach rather than a particular ideology.

The call for change in educational materials is evidenced by the many guidelines from states and local school boards indicating what is considered suitable learning material for an egalitarian society. However, because of the rapidity of social change and its varied cross currents, guidelines that offer general direction and goals are preferable to those with too specific and rigid mandates.

General guidelines and recommendations, rather than firm directives, will insure that communities and states are free to choose from the full range of educational materials in the marketplace. Experience shows that no one "ideal program" has ever been written or even described. Competition among publishers will insure a full and varied response to the valid concerns of the community, without undue restrictions on freedom of expression or creativity. It is important to note that guidelines for the inclusion of imaginative literature in school programs (poetry, fiction, drama, etc.) call for somewhat different criteria than those applied to newly prepared instructional materials. Frequently reflecting the social and cultural values of past historical periods, a literary selection must generally be assessed for its overall contribution to the education of young people.

It is our experience that educational publishers are making a determined effort to produce books and learning units that represent all groups of people. They have heightened their sensitivity to the subtlety and pervasiveness of bias and stereotype. The growing consciousness of the industry is both a response to current societal concerns and an awareness of the impact of instructional programs on young people's thinking.

In evaluating learning materials for fair treatment of all, three main areas—content, illustrations, and language—require special attention. Different publishers have approached full implementation of these areas in a variety of ways and with differing degrees of specificity. We believe that basic commitment is shared by all, however, and is embodied in the individual publisher's guidelines from which the next three sections of this booklet are excerpted.

CONTENT: Individuals of all ages and ethnic groups have much to gain from the elimination of stereotypes. Bias-free educational materials more accurately represent reality, encourage tolerance for individual differences, and allow more freedom for children to discover and express their needs, interests, and abilities.

Specifically, bias-free educational materials are those that:

- represent different groups of people in varied activities and vocations, including positions of leadership, and show children aspiring to a variety of careers.
- represent fairly and accurately the historic and current achievements of people, especially women and members of minorities, and include a fair proportion of materials about, and written or executed by, women and minority people.
- use material that honestly conveys the exploitation of people and the real hardships imposed on people through such exploitation.
- depict all men and women as having the full range of human emotions and behavior, and finding for themselves attributes that lead to self-esteem and success.
- represent minority and majority groups in varied communities—urban, suburban, and rural; and all ranges of socio-economic levels.

ILLUSTRATIONS: Illustrations in educational materials, by virtue of their visual immediacy, may carry an even stronger message than the text they illustrate. Pictures may leave a lasting impression about the tone of a book; the array of illustrations in a book is a strong projection of its intent.

Specifically, bias-free illustrations should:

- reflect a fair and reasonable balance of representation with regard to race, religions, ethnic groups, age, economic levels, sex and national origin.
- provide positive role models for students of different ethnic and racial backgrounds and of both sexes.
- avoid stereotypes and caricatures of individuals and groups to offer a realistic and broad view of physical features.
- promote opportunities for placing women and minority group members in positions of prominence, leadership and centrality.

LANGUAGE: Bias-free language is language that includes all people and treats them with equal dignity and respect, whatever their race, sex, age, religion or national and ethnic origin. Bias-free language deals with people as individuals, not as members of stereotyped groups. It minimizes the cultural differences on which prejudice is often based, avoids insults and derogatory connotations, and does not trivialize or patronize, slight or slander, mock or deride whole classes of people. It is language of equal opportunity.

Specifically, bias-free language is language that:

- seeks to encompass members of both sexes by 1) avoiding the use of man and its derivatives to denote the average person or the human race; and 2) designating occupations by the work performed, not only by the gender of the worker.

- avoids excluding women by the use of the generic pronoun he by pluralizing, shifting to one, you, or we; rephrasing to eliminate gender pronouns altogether, or balancing he with she.
- understands generic terms such as doctor, lawyer, teacher, secretary, and poet, as applying to both sexes and to all races or ethnic groups.
- uses parallel language to give equal treatment to various persons and groups through the use of equivalent terms and construction. Parallel style in names means that the style employed for one individual is used for all and does not vary depending on the sex, race, or social or marital status of the persons named. Parallelism in descriptions calls for an emphasis on pertinent information and an avoidance of role stereotypes.
- reflects our cultural diversity by including a variety of ethnic names as well as the more common Anglo-Saxon ones.
- avoids loaded words, biased connotations, and prejudiced assumptions. Particularly it expresses critical or negative judgments with words not associated with a particular race or sex, as, an evil heart rather than a black heart, affected mannerisms rather than effeminate mannerisms.

Publishers continue to respond to the need for multiethnic nonsexist materials called for by many state and city guidelines which clearly delineate goals and needs. They urge those states and cities that wish to create guidelines to avoid regulations that may become a form of censorship. In the last analysis, publishers and the public are united in their concern and effort to provide quality learning materials for all students.

SECTION 12. STATE EDUCATION DEPARTMENTS

This section is a compilation of available information and resources provided by the 50 State education departments on the selection of elementary and secondary textbooks and instructional and curriculum materials.

The information and materials were provided in response to a written request to each State education department[1] for information on any statewide policies on textbook selection; i.e., statutes, guidelines, review procedures, and so forth.

The States were also requested to send any resources for promoting race and sex fairness or training programs and workshops for teachers, parents, counselors, and administrators that they had developed or were currently utilizing.

This section includes references to all materials received in response to our inquiry. Items have not been evaluated and their inclusion should not be interpreted as an endorsement.

This directory is organized alphabetically by State. For each State, information is provided as to the individuals and departments to contact about textbook selection procedures for that State. The complete address and phone number is entered below the name of the State.

When requesting information by mail, we suggest that the title of the contact person be used, rather than the individual's name, to prevent the inquiry from being held up for a particular person (unless so desired). If a particular person is preferred, an advance phone call may provide the best assurance that the individual is in town and still occupies the position indicated. Otherwise, general mailing may become dead-ended and there may be no reply.

Following this information is a list of existing statutes, procedures, guidelines, and resources provided by the State education department.[2] Preceding each category is a brief description of the type of item; i.e., either a statute, procedure, guideline, resource, or a combination of these, presented in that order. Thus, if one or more of these words does not appear for a State, it can be assumed that there are no items in the corresponding category for that State.

On the line below each description and title are the group/grade level/subject area codes. For a complete description of this coding system, see the coding section of the general introduction.

The information provided in this section can enable educators and community members to determine the procedures used in each State for textbook selection and adoption, as well as what resources are available in that State.

Two reports are available that can be used in conjunction with this directory to provide a broad overview of State involvement in textbook selection and in particular with regard to race and ethnicity.

One report, State Laws and Regulations Governing Selection of Instructional Materials, is a publication of the National Education Association[3] that summarizes the textbook selection procedures in all 50 States. The information is presented in tables highlighting: (1) the patterns of textbook selection, (2) the State agency responsible for textbook selection decisions, and (3) the requirements and adoption cycles for each State (by grade level of textbooks).

[1] Letters were sent to individuals listed in the July 1977 "List of Chief State School Officers" published by the Office of Education, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and to specific individuals responsible for textbook selection and curriculum materials within State education departments.

[2] Note that the statutes, procedures, guidelines, and resources listed in Section 12 are also included in several other sections of this guide (cf. Section 10). Whenever an item from the State directory is included in another section, it is listed by its title only, with the State's name given as the item location. An asterisk (*) is used to refer the user to this section for mailing and additional information.

[3] State Laws and Regulations Governing Selection of Instructional Materials, 1972, NEA Research Memo 1972—17, National Education Association, 1201 16th St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

Also included are the results of a survey of local school educators in which educators were asked what criteria they considered important when textbooks were reviewed and listed by State agencies. This brief report provides an overview of those criteria viewed as essential. The report concludes with recommendations and guidelines developed by the National Education Association concerning the "Improvement of Instruction," the "Selection of Materials," "Cultural Diversity in Instructional Materials," and "Accountability."

The second report, Education and the New Pluralism: A Preliminary Survey of Recent Progress in the 50 States, may be obtained from the American Jewish Committee.[1] This document reviews any statutes, procedures, programs, and materials that have been developed to promote ethnic studies. The conclusion of the American Jewish Committee parallels our own with regard to the considerable variation in States' activities: "In some states, there is no apparent interest whatsoever in ethnic studies. In others, there is a considerable amount of legislation and policy on books, but limited evidence of implementation. And in still others, with no law or policy, there is a tremendous amount of local activity."[2]

SECTION 13. ORGANIZATIONS

Section 13 lists in alphabetical order organizations that can be contacted for additional or specialized information and resources. While this list is not exhaustive, it does include most of the major organizations that have demonstrated their concern about textbook biases and are addressing this problem. Furthermore, this section is supplemented by other organization lists included in numerous resources from throughout this guide.

Unlike other sections, codes are not provided for Section 13. It was beyond the scope of this project to contact every organization to obtain the necessary information for coding.

U.S. COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights is a temporary, independent, bipartisan agency established by Congress in 1957 and directed to:

- Investigate complaints alleging that citizens are being deprived of their right to vote by reason of their race, color, religion, sex, age, handicap, or national origin, or by reason of fraudulent practices;
- Study and collect information concerning legal developments constituting discrimination or a denial of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution because of race, color, religion, sex, age, handicap, or national origin, or in the administration of justice;
- Appraise Federal laws and policies with respect to discrimination or the denial of equal protection of the laws because of race, color, religion, sex, age, handicap, or national origin, or in the administration of justice;
- Serve as a national clearinghouse for information in respect to discrimination or denials of equal protection of the laws because of race, color, religion, sex, age, handicap, or national origin;
- Submit reports, findings, and recommendations to the President and the Congress.
